Construction Contract Claims, Changes, and Dispute Resolution

Changes and claims are a natural part of the construction process. Managing them is a paramount responsibility of the project and construction management teams to reduce their impact on the project and the project budget. In this session we will review contract provisions for dealing with both changes and claims.

It means deliberately not making changes to the force majeure, stop work orders, change in law and other provisions of your current contract template, thereby allowing the existing terms to "speak for themselves" on the new project.

Construction contracts: Addressing COVID-19 risks

The combined effect of the changes that were brought about by the New Construction Act and the recent increase in the Small Claims threshold is that parties to construction contracts dated 1 October 2011 or later, with claims worth less than £10,000, are now unlikely to find it cost effective either to adjudicate or to litigate, unless they are prepared to conduct a significant proportion of those proceedings themselves.

Small claims under the "New Construction Act"

Changes and claims are a common element of today's construction industry, particularly where the project is complex and may result in millions of dollars of extra payment. Construction changes were also discussed in a previous chapter; here mainly construction claims or unresolved changes will be addressed.
