'Tales of the Tikongs' is a small feast, prepared by a master chef of a writer who knows the cuisine of the Pacific like no one else. Epeli Hau'ofa's extensive knowledge as an academic, a critic, an artist and by his own admission, a peasant albeit a highly educated one, are honed together in these fabulously absurd and satiric tales that will leave you laughing so hysterically, you wouldn't quite know what hit you.

Tales of the Tikongs was translated into Danish in 2002 by John Allan Pedersen (as Stillehavsfortællinger, ISBN 87-7514-076-4) The BBC History magazine writes that Hau'ofa provided a "reconceptualisation of the Pacific": In his "influential essay Our Sea of Islands", he argued that Pacific Islanders "were connected rather than separated by the sea. Far from being sea-locked peoples marooned on coral or volcanic tips of land, islanders formed an oceanic community based on voyaging."

Epeli Hau'ofa - Wikipedia
